WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

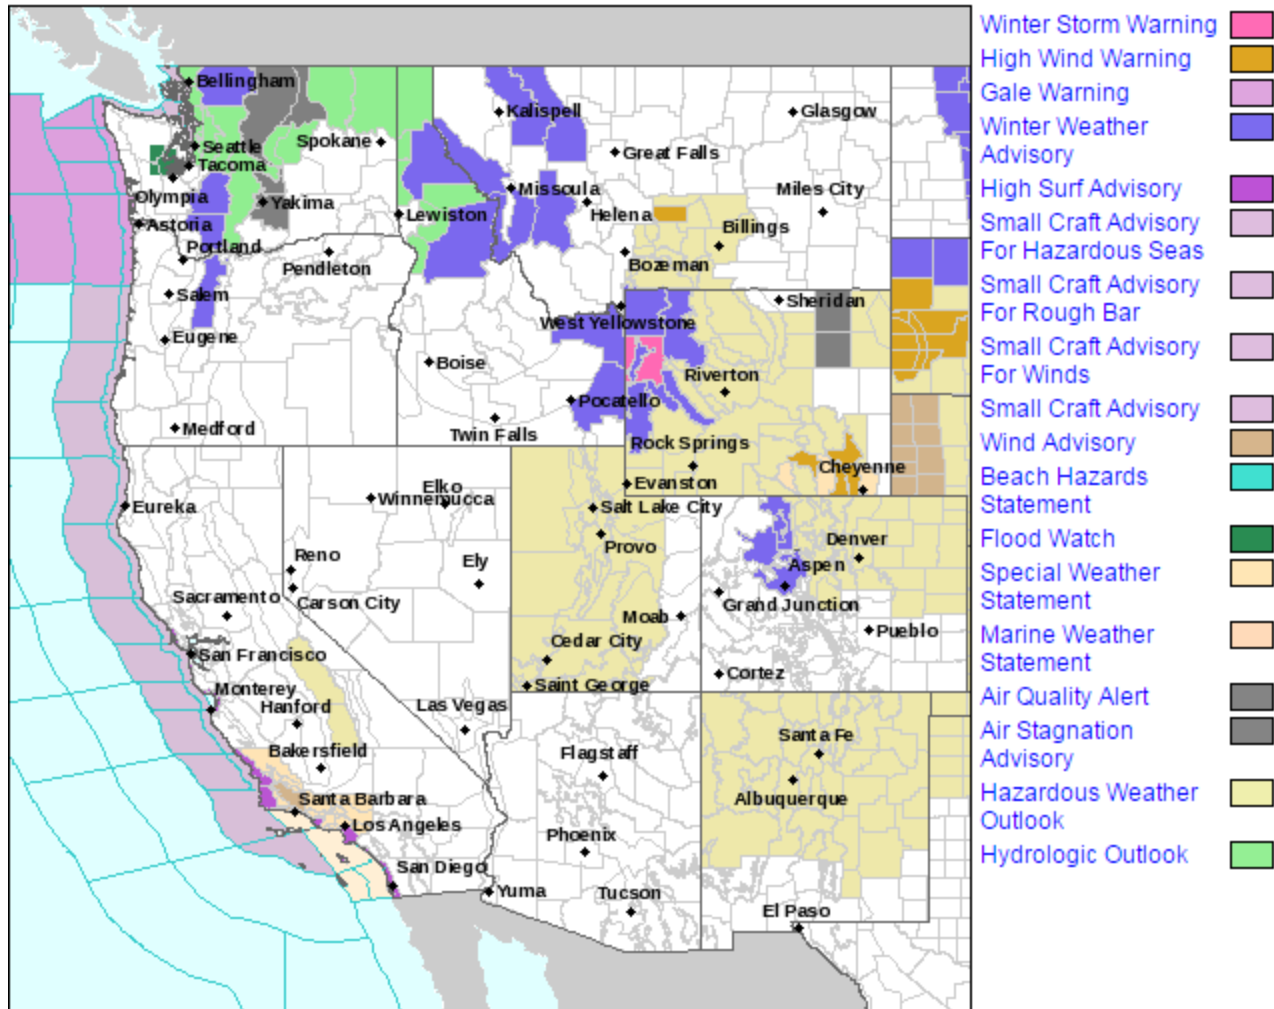

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

High pressure continues to build Sunday through Tuesday with possible record high temperatures by early in the week. On Wednesday, temperatures will cool as a trough approaches with rain becoming likely Wednesday night into Thursday. Showers end by Thursday afternoon with a return to dry weather Friday through next weekend.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

High pressure building aloft and another round of Santa Ana winds will once again bring unseasonably hot and dry weather to Southwest California between Sunday and Tuesday. High temperatures on these days will likely range from the mid to upper 80s and low 90s for many coastal and valley areas. Many record highs will be threatened once again. Gusty Santa Ana winds and relative humidity values in the teens will also result in elevated fire danger, with late Sunday night into Monday being the period of strongest winds and greatest fire weather concern. West-northwest swell arriving today will generate high surf and strong rip currents at the beaches of Orange and San Diego Counties. Surf will build today and peak Saturday into early Sunday. Swell and surf will slowly lower on Sunday.
